BECOMING AN...

Informed Investor

Today's Topic:

Common Stocks

Common stocks represent units of ownership in a particular corporation, they are also referred to as shares. A shareholder is an owner of a company's shares/stocks. Public company shares are listed and valued daily on one of the various stock exchanges.

A stock exchange is an organized marketplace where brokers and dealers meet to execute orders from institutional and individual investors to buy and sell securities. Each stock exchange sets its own listing requirements; the New York Stock Exchange is the most stringent.

Other stock exchanges include the American Stock Exchange, NASDAQ and numerous regional stock exchanges. The combination of all these various stock exchanges is called the stock market.

Stocks can be purchased or sold through an agent called a broker. A broker is a registered dealer who places a security trade on your behalf for a fee. By purchasing stocks you become part owner of a company, or a shareholder, and may vote on certain company issues and share in future company profitability. A stock price is the value of a common stock at a point in time. A change in the value of a security from what you paid for a stock results in either a capital appreciation or a capital loss.
